@Takashi

In Japan, the school year starts in April, and it's divided into three [1 terms]. We start school when we're six and we spend the first six years at [2 primary school]. After that, we go to [3 secondary], which is made up of two separate stages: we [4 attend] middle school for three years, and then high school for another three years. You need to [5 pass] exams to get into high school, and it's important to get good [6 grades] in the exams. If you want to [7 do a degree] at university after high school, you have to have the necessary [8 qualifications]. Teachers and parents follow our [9 progress] closely to make sure that we don't [10 fail]. We have to [11 concentrate] hard in class, and we get homework [12 assignments] every evening and during the holidays. We don't often have to write an [13 essay], but we have to [14 revise] for exams for two or three hours every day. The best thing about my school is that we use a lot of [15 technology], like laptops and tablets. My favourite time of day is lunchtime: we don't have a [16 canteen], but we all eat lunch together in our classroom.
